RESEARCH GRANTS

Externally Funded Research

Awarded: DACH/UIT Homelessness Project. National Homelessness Initiative, 2006 Government of Canada, Region of Durham.
"Understanding Homelessness in Durham Region." Amount awarded $84,074 .
Hannah Scott, Shahid Alvi, Wendy Stanyon
Role Principal Administrator, Co-Principal Investigator.

Description

*This project completed a 1-day census of homeless people in the Durham region in addition to a series of one-time in-depth qualitative interviews with homeless people in the region. Specific focus is on the Durham Region, with help from the region with respect to organization and contact. This grant was designed to initiate and inaugurate study of the breadth of the problem of homelessness in this region. This project was carried out in four phases: Focus group input, a first census of the homeless population in Durham Region, 50 qualitative interviews, and a second census. This project yielded 64 interviews with various homeless individuals. One journal article (<http://www.nova.edu/ssss/OR/OR15-5/alvi.pdf>) has been written to date, along with a final report, and an executive summary. These reports can be found at <http://cesr.uoit.ca>
>Resources > Reports*

Awarded: SACSI Project
1999 "Five Cities Project: Strategic Initiatives for Community Safety." Awarded:
$249,964 by the National Institute of Justice. No. 1999-IJ-CX-K007
Richard Janikowski, Phyllis Betts, Hannah Scott, Lisa Klesges, Kris Henning, Role Co-Principal Investigator.

Description:

This project, funded by the National Institute of Justice (NIJ), was part of a five-city initiative to design data-driven intervention and prevention strategies to deal with targeted crime problems. Other cities involved in this initiative include Winston-Salem, NC, Portland, OR, Indianapolis, IN, and New Haven, CT. The City of Memphis targeted crimes of sexual assault and designed lever-pulling interventions to reduce incidents of sexual assault and sexual battery.

Awarded: WEV Project

1999 “Women’s Experience with Violence: A Collaborative Research Initiative for the Center for Research on Women and the Memphis Sexual Assault Resource Center.” Awarded: $338,448 by the National Institute of Justice. No. 1999-WT-VX-007.

Phyllis Betts, Martha Schmidt, Richard Janikowski, Lisa Klesges, Kris Henning, Hannah Scott.

Role Co-Principal Investigator.

Description

This project was specifically designed to look at women’s experiences of violence, in particular sexual assault. This project extends the work done with SACSI, delving deeper into the intricacies of sexual assault events. This is accomplished by compiling case file data on sexual assault events, and doing follow-up interviews with a sample of sexual assault victims. This project is currently in the interview phase of data collection.

Internally Funded Research

Awarded: SSHRC Internal Grant Competition, UOIT

2011 “Durham Area Survey Pilot Study.”
$2000.00, Hannah Scott

Role Principal Investigator

Description

This grant was awarded to pursue a pilot test of the Durham Area Survey. The intent of this grant is to use it to work on a project that will be proposed for SSHRC funding within the next granting season. This work is now complete, and MRI and SSRHC funding is now being sought to move the project forward.

Awarded: Start up Grant, UOIT Provost’s Office

2009 “Centre for Evaluation and Survey Research (CESR).” Amount awarded
$125,000. Hannah Scott and Nawal Ammar

Role Principal Administrator, Principal Investigator.

Description

The Centre for Evaluation and Survey Research (CESR) is an initiative to provide the survey research infrastructure to both the academic and non-academic community. CESR offers several services, including online surveys, consultation on survey design and implantation, interview training for quantitative and qualitative projects, and so on. The funding is for 3 years, and assumes that CESR will generate its own funding after a period of time.

Awarded 2003 UOIT Research Grant
Start Up
$15,000, Hannah Scott

Role Principal Administrator, Principal Investigator.

Description

This money was awarded by the University of Ontario Institute of Technology to seed research. To date, this money has paid for several summer research assistants, and provided necessary research equipment for ongoing project. Project include, but are not limited to, the final preparation of the draft “The Female Serial Murderer,” and preparation for a new research project looking at various aspects of mass murderers.

Awarded 1997 University of Memphis Research Grant
$5,000, Hannah Scott

Role Principal Investigator

Description

This grant was awarded to seed various research projects at the University of Memphis. Several projects were completed with this money, including pilot research for the SACSI and WEV projects mentions above and preparation of the manuscript “The Female Serial Murderer.”

Innovation Grants

Awarded 2008 University of Ontario Institute of Technology – Technology Innovation Fund.
$3009.00

Role Principal Investigator

Description

Awarded by the Vice Provost – Information Technology, this grant was to supplement the OPIC grant below for the completion of the SPSS 16.0 series and to get the product ready for market.

Awarded 2007 OPIC IPM Group of Ontario Universities: “The Virtual Teaching Assistant:
Film Series Demonstrating Operations of the Statistical Package from the Social Sciences (SPSS) 15.0”
Award: $10,665.00

Role Principal Investigator

Description

Awarded by the University of Ontario Institute of Technology and Ryerson University (Ryerson) representing the OPIC IPM Group of Ontario universities (GROUP). The purpose of this grant is to update the SPSS film series and make the product ready for commercialization. This is a shared initiative between UOIT and myself. This project will see a new series of updated films be created, similar to those pilot tested here at UOIT with SPSS 12.0, but for a wider audience. See below for more details about this project.

Awarded 2005 University of Ontario Institute of Technology – Technology Innovation Fund.
Award: $4983.49

Role Principal Investigator

Description

Using Camtasia software, interactive “mini-films” to aid students in SPSS lab training. This product creates “professional-looking screen recordings.” Approximately 30+ learning objects have been built to take students, step-by-step through the SPSS program. These mini-film subjects range from basic lessons such as “How to set up your program so we are all looking at the same format” to other “How to...” segments such as carrying out cross-tabulation, recoding, computing variables, and even regression analysis. Additionally, Flash features are incorporated into these objects to make them “interactive.”

Multiple Film Development: The Virtual Teaching Assistant: SPSS 16.0

These films were designed both as a teaching aid, but also an instructional training film on selected portions of SPSS, version 16.0. These films were made possible by grants from the University of Ontario Institute of Technology and Ryerson University (Ryerson) representing the OPIC IPM Group of Ontario universities (GROUP) and the Teaching and Innovation Fund (TIF) at UOIT. This project was conceptualized, overseen and verified by Dr. Hannah Scott, Faculty of Criminology, Justice, & Policy Studies. A detailed list of films is below. These films were designed to help instructors with the basic tasks of SPSS 16.0 providing student with video instruction with the SPSS 16.0 program. Each film takes the student through a selected procedure; a narrator demonstrates how to interpret results of the task performed. Embedded in each film are a series of Flash® points where the film is stopped and the student is encouraged to click on an area selected by a “call-out.” In this way, the student can go through some of the motions involved in carrying out tasks while they are viewing the film. This process aids in retention of the material learned, as students not only have visual memories of the material, but some embedded with physical action. At the end of each section there is a short quiz to self-test the viewer on what they have just seen. Thirty-two short films and the prologue licensed to Wiley Company and are available to all UOIT Students. Faculties of Business & Information Technology and Social Science are the most ardent users totally about 1000 regular users at the UOIT site. This film series is included here as it is offered as a free teaching aid to UOIT students, as well as being licensed to Wiley Canada and Wiley UK.

Courses Taught

05/03-pres. Faculty of Social Science and Humanities, University of Ontario Institute of Technology

Advanced Justice Studies

Class size: 30

This course examines the relationship between space and crime, including techniques of Crime Prevention Through Environmental Design. Students will work in teams and be assigned various spaces to carry out an applied assessment of what is learned in the classroom on the campus. This is a hands-on type course. It is expected students will learn concepts by completing an actual CPTED audit.

Integrating Project (4th Year)

Class size: 36

This course is our capstone project that requires intensive one-on-one time with students working on original research projects at an undergraduate level. The purpose of this course is to integrate all knowledge gained through your tenure at UOIT and apply that knowledge and skill base to a practical, small-scale, research project. Students will be learn how to work through a single research problem, using existing resources at UOIT. Emphasis will be placed on organizing a research question, conducting small-scale research on a data set, and writing up results from that project. Paper projects are open, but limited by resources available at the university.

Victimology (3rd Year)

Class size: 75 - 165

This course gives an introduction to victimology, with special emphasis on definitions of victim and its implications for the discipline of criminology, family violence issues, sexual assault, hate crimes, homicide, restitution, compensation, victim services, victim rights, culpability, and vulnerability. At the undergraduate level, this course is designed as more of a lecture format, introducing students to issues surrounding victims of crime. Both sociological and psychological explanations surrounding the events of becoming a victim of crime, and surviving through victim status, will be discussed. Students are exposed to a variety of topics and encouraged to pursue interest in areas of victimology they find of personal interest.

Issues in Organized Crime (3rd Year)

Class size: 130 - 170

The purpose of this course is to familiarize students with substantive areas of what has traditionally and newly identified as forms of organized crime. In particular, this course will examine topic including, but not limited to, issues surrounding white collar crime, mafia-type structures, large gang organizations, transnational criminal activities, money laundering, etc. Current theoretical explanations of these behaviours are examined in light of the operations of these large, illicitly operating, organizations.

Quantitative Methods (2nd Year).

Class size: 35-110

The objective of this course is to familiarize students with the principles of statistical analysis in the social sciences with an emphasis on criminology and Criminal Justice. Topics may include measures of central tendency and dispersion, cross-tabulations, single and two sample tests for means, analysis of variance, non-parametric statistics, correlation and regression. This course does have a lab component to it. The lab component is taught by both an instructor and a teaching assistant. Students are expected to get both a working knowledge of statistical procedures and a “hands-on” experience doing analysis with SPSS. This is a required course for all students in the Faculty of Social Science.

Introduction to Canadian Criminal Justice (1st year).

Class size: 70-210

The purpose of this course is to introduce students to issues and intricacies of the criminal justice system in Canada. Topics to be covered include, but are not limited to, basic operational information of how the larger criminal justice system works, how information on crime is collected, how specific issues surrounding the major components within the system (police, bail, courts, sentencing, probation and parole, and prison), and specific problems faced by different groups who have contact with the system. This is a required course for all students in the Faculty of Social Science.

Introduction to Psychology (1st year).

Class size: 120-180

This course provides the student with some of the basic theoretical and Methodological principals of psychology. Topics covered include, but are not limited to, defining mental illness, the DSM4, behaviourism, cognitive psychology, experimental and quasi-experimental modeling, and testing instruments. Students should have a more comprehensive understanding of the discipline of psychology, with specific knowledge of how it both is different from sociology, and fits into the criminology and criminal justice disciplines. This is a required course for all students in the Faculty of Social Science and the Faculty of Health Sciences.

09/98-05/03 Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice, The University of Memphis.

Statistics for Criminal Justice (3rd Year)

Class sizes: 30-50

The objective of this course is to familiarize students with the principles of statistical analysis in criminology and criminal justice. Topics may include measures of central tendency and dispersion, cross-tabulations, single and two sample tests for means, analysis of variance, non-parametric statistics, correlation and regression. This course does have a lab component to it. The lab component is worth one credit hour, and is taught by both an instructor and a teaching assistant. Students are expected to get both a working knowledge of statistical procedures and a “hands-on” experience doing analysis with SPSS. This is a required course.

Criminology (3rd year)

Class sizes: 15-40

Criminology is an interdisciplinary field which combines ideas from social science, natural science, philosophy, and jurisprudence in an attempt to understand why certain acts are viewed as crime, why people engage in crime, and how society reacts to crime. This class explores the nature and extent of crime, types of crime and the people who commit them, and most importantly, theoretical explanations of criminal behavior. Students who successfully complete this course gain a solid base of knowledge about how crime is examined, measured, and explained in modern societies. This is a required course.

Criminology (Graduate)

Class sizes: 5-15

This course is designed to familiarize students with criminological theory both in content and in historical context. Students will be encouraged not only to explore individual theories, but also to explore the historical and personal characteristics that existed at the time these theories were developed. In addition, as Criminology is a relatively young discipline, students are encouraged to examine new extensions of present paradigmatic theoretical structures. This is a required course.

Victimology (Graduate)

Class sizes: 6

This course gives an introduction to victimology, with special emphasis on definitions of victim and its implications for the discipline of criminology, family violence issues, sexual assault, hate crimes, restitution, compensation, victim services, victim rights, culpability, and vulnerability. Information for this course is drawn from various sources including both qualitative accounts of victimization as well as more quantitative measures such as victimization surveys. At the graduate level, instructional emphasis is placed on seminar and presentation format of complex material. Graduates students are encouraged to go in-depth with information, optimally completing some original research project. Open discussion of issues facing victims is encouraged.

07/95-06-98 Department of Sociology, University of Alberta.

Introduction to Sociology (1st year)

Class sizes: 30-250.

The purpose of this course is to familiarize students with the theory, methods, and substantive areas within the discipline of sociology. This includes (but is not limited to) lectures in the areas of the process of socialization, cultural and gender related issues, racial and ethnic relations, deviance and criminology, collective behavior, population studies, global stratification, the role of religion, family, health, education, and politics.

Introduction to Criminology (2nd year)

Class sizes: 35-300

Criminology is an interdisciplinary field which combines ideas from social science, natural science, philosophy, and jurisprudence in an attempt to understand why certain acts are viewed as crime, why people engage in crime, and how society reacts to crime. This class explores the nature and extent of crime, types of crime and the people who commit them, and most importantly, theoretical explanations of criminal behavior. Students who successfully complete this course gain a solid base of knowledge about how crime is examined, measured, and explained in modern societies. This is a required course.

Deviance (2nd year)

Class sizes: 30-40

The purpose of this course is to familiarize students with issues in deviance including historical and cultural issues surrounding deviant behavior, deviance theory, issues of measurement, as well as some more substantive issues. This is accomplished by familiarizing the student with some of the essential readings in this area, highlighting and illustrating various theories of deviance. Students engage in both discussions and exercises to highlight popular conceptions of both deviant and conformist behavior.

Introduction to Sociology (3rd year)

Class sizes: 35-200

This course introduces students who have had more experience with post-secondary education to basic issues within sociology. This course is taught at a more advanced level, but still accomplishes the same goals as the introductory course taught at entry level.

July 94', 95', 96'. Faculty of Extension, University of Alberta.

Summer Youth University - Sociology

Class sizes: 10-20

SYU was a program designed by the University of Alberta to introduce high school students to the university system. In essence, students are taught basic concepts within sociology. Youth are encouraged to ask questions, and to rotate classes as they would as university students. Lectures given were selected from the Introduction to Sociology lectures given at the university, but taught at a more simplistic level. This course was taught 4 times over a one month period.

Courses prepared for

Agencies of Social Control (4th year)

Conformist behavior is the most popular form of adaptation that people engage in. However, periodically families, communities, and larger populations often experience difficulty in regulating some of its members. The purpose of this course is to familiarize students with systems of control over human behavior. Students are introduced to various social control mechanisms, in both historical and cultural context, that are designed to aid in adaptation to conformity. Topics to be covered include (but are not limited to) agencies of personal self control mechanisms, family, peers, moral entrepreneurs, larger social pressures, child and adult advocacy centers, child and adult social service agencies, police, courts, jail systems, and law.
